ADVERTISEMENT What you will need: Save the file as a JPG Photoshop CS4 This tutorial is created by author Nicholas at Creativebloq. Check out his website or his portfolio for more examples. Step 1 Open up Photoshop. Photoshop uses a grid layout to allow for easier spacing between objects. You may feel more at ease with a tabbed browser, or you may be able to adjust the grid setting as well. Step 2 Hit the New button, located to the left of the work area. Find the Select tool and click on it, or press the F key for the same effect. Then move the mouse pointer to one of the available images or areas in the image you want to work on. Click and drag to add that area of the image to the "new" document. Step 3 Let's create a new layer to work on. You'll use this later on when we're ready to retouch our image. Right-click on the New Layers tab and click "New Layer." Move the cursor to the right edge of the new layer and click. You will now have a new layer above the original image. To make the layer appear on the bottom of your image, move the cursor to the left and click. Step 4 If you are new to Photoshop, you'll want to name your layer "Retouch." The name is not too important, but it's a good idea to label it something descriptive if you're still learning how to use Photoshop. Click in the empty white space and type "Retouch." Step 5 Right-click and choose "Levels." In the dialog that appears, click on the "Colors" tab. Step 6 Use the color picker to create an exact duplicate of the current image. Color, brightness, contrast, and saturation can be adjusted to your liking. Step 7 Adjust the "Black Point" slider until it matches the black spot at the bottom left corner of the image

There is a tool like this in Photoshop, but it won't work unless the brush tool is depressed by a finger. If you're seeing the tip of a finger, then the brush tool is depressed). The Brush tool can be used in various ways. To get started, create a new document, and use the default size setting, 100%, or whatever size you want. Then, right-click on the new document, and choose the choice "Create a new brush set". *Note: In an older version of Photoshop, you could do the previous instructions by first hitting the Edit tool. Then, right-click on the tool, choose the choice "Create a new brush set", and then use the previous instructions as you did with the button version. A brush is just like any other tool in Photoshop. This is great when you want to reset the tool to its default settings (usually with no presets at all). The Brush tool allows you to paint on an image. You can paint a fill that will show up when you paint over it, or you can create a selection and paint the selected area. The brush tool is the most basic tool in Photoshop. It is used for light and medium painting. When you hold down the mouse button, you can adjust the brush properties, add new brushes, or reset to the default brush settings. - There are three main brush types: - The Brush tool's default setting: A Photoshop default brush.
